Fruit-sellers, Cairo. Egypt is a land of fruit as well as a land of vegetables. Among the commonest kinds sold in the markets are oranges, lemons, pomegranates and figs; of late even strawberries have been grown in districts where water is plentiful. This donkey's panniers are laden with oranges, and the Nubian, whose full face is seen, has a tray of hard bread-cakes balanced on his head, that he will sell to the buyers of melons.
